History

The Isneum consider themselves the natives of the Asatta Peninsula. Any mentioning of them arriving from elsewhere or not being of this world have been eliminated, and none dare speak such blasphemy. The term "Isneum" is their word for 'The Bold' or 'brave ones', which is how they titulate themselves. Foreigners and other races are named "Ulineum Anibnida", "(those) who are not us" / "unknown other ones" .

Long before Asatta was established, the Isneum lived on the north-eastern part of the peninsula, cut off from the main land that would be later known as Bia

Thin due to the very mountain chain that had pushed the landmass they now called home above the surface. As the mainland was visible in the distance, the Isneum became inspired to reach beyond their small pocket of land, with two ways the most prevalent: Ship building and tunnel construction.

This spark of creativity and desire to reach what lies beyond has remained part of the Isneum even into modern days.

According to Isneum folklore, a lost tribe exists, the Heobihan, that supposedly live(d) on Mu.

Language and writing systems

Isneum speak their own language, Isneum tongue. Their script is does not resemble real life korean.

Discrimination

All Isneum that are born in Asatta are taught from an early age to hate the Buêrêng and the Senzo, for both are seen as powerhungry conquerers. Kilan are often portrayed as mounted demons in bed time stories, leading to inherent distrust when older. Isneum born in Ilan Qurun are the exact opposite, as their very neighbors might be one of the ethnic groups mentioned. Northerners and Nilfgaardians are seen as uninvited guests most of them, tolerated, but usually not seen as someone to be encouraged to remain.

Senzo call the Isneum the Yabanzoku, the wild people. Buêrêng call them Yeren, savages. This belief that the Isneum are somewhat lesser can be attributed to inborn human tendencies to see people of a different ethnic group (that still looks very similar to their own) as enemies or inferior, though some wise ones suggest it may be due to Asatta having much more humble beginnings than either the Tenijima Empire or Bia Thin. Kilan refer to them as Nrjo-tsyin in Unen.
